SEPTA (Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority)

There are three trains that run in the city, Orange, Blue and Green. The Orange Line runs north and south underneath Broad Street, one of the main thoroughfares in Philadelphia. The Blue Line runs east and west under Market Street, another thoroughfare. Orange and Blue Lines intersect one another at City Hall with a free interchange. The Green Lines are mainly located in west Philly eventually turning into surface trolleys.

The closest stop to our Hyatt hotel near Philadelphia airport is at 2nd and Market Streets (Blue Line). This is only a five minute walk from our front door. One way fare for any of the trains through the city is $2.00. Multiple tokens can be purchased at specified locations for a discounted price. For more information please visit their website at www.septa.org.

Amtrak has been transporting passengers along America's railways for 40 years. When it comes to traveling along the Northeast corridor, there's no easier way than hopping aboard an Amtrak train and riding the rails.

If you need to get to Philadelphia quickly, Acela Express trains running between Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Washington, DC, are the way to go. Amtrak offers quick, comfortable travel between the cities seven days a week.

Amtrak service in Philadelphia originates at the beautiful 30th Street Station.
